

Temporary Protected Status: An Overview

Background and Overview

In U.S. immigration policy, it is a key principle not to return migrants back to a country where their life or freedom is at risk. Those fleeing persecution in the U.S. may be granted safe haven on an individual basis, as refugees or asylum seekers, or in groups of people for humanitarian reasons.

There are some instances when the Secretary of Homeland Security may grant Temporary Protected Status (TPS) to citizens of a country for a period of 6 to 18 months at a time if there is armed conflict; a natural disaster; or if "extraordinary and temporary conditions" prevent them from returning home.

A person can only qualify for TPS if they were already in the U.S. at the time of designation. There is no pathway to a green card or citizenship for TPS recipients. Instead, TPS is a temporary protection and TPS holders can obtain employment authorization and are eligible to apply for special permission to travel and return to the United States. In the event that TPS ends or is denied, an individual may be subject to deportation.

Who is covered by TPS?

At the end of the Biden Administration, 17 countries had a TPS designation: Afghanistan, Burma (Myanmar), Cameroon, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Haiti, Honduras, Lebanon, Nepal, Nicaragua, Somalia, South Sudan, Sudan, Syria, Ukraine, Venezuela, and Yemen. As of March 31, 2025 there were approximately 1,297,635 TPS holders living in the United States.<sup>1</sup> This number reflected a significant growth in the TPS population as a result of new designations as well as the re-designation of Venezuela and Haiti, among others, which extended protection to more newly arrived individuals. In addition, as of June 30, 2025 there were 1,014,324 TPS applications pending - a mix of renewals and initial applications.<sup>2</sup>

The Trump Administration has terminated or announced the termination of all but 4 of the 17 countries leading to more than 1,000,000 people being stripped of status, and the protection from deportation and work authorization that come with TPS. Court challenges have been effective in pausing some, but not all, terminations.

Who are TPS holders in Massachusetts?

At the end of March 2025, Massachusetts was home to 44,825 TPS holders, making it the state with the 8th highest TPS population.<sup>3</sup> Many TPS holders are not recent arrivals, have children who are now in high school or college in the U.S. and have little, if any, contact with their parents' country of origin. Salvadoran TPS holders, for example, have lived in the U.S. for nearly 25 years. The largest TPS populations in Massachusetts as of March 2025 are TPS holders from Haiti (30,940), El Salvador (6,885), Venezuela (3,140), and Ukraine (1,715).<sup>4</sup>

How do TPS holders contribute to Massachusetts' economy?

During the COVID pandemic, 5,600 TPS holders were essential workers in healthcare, food production, transportation, and critical services in Massachusetts.<sup>5</sup> Since then, the states' TPS population has grown significantly. In 2023, TPS holders held more than $463 million in spending power, paying $134 million in state, local, and federal taxes.<sup>6</sup>

What do we do now?

MIRA strongly supports the continuation of the TPS program as a moral and humanitarian imperative. The U.S. has a proud tradition of providing safe harbor to people fleeing dangerous conditions, and TPS is an important mechanism to do this. We are disappointed by this administration's taking TPS away from so many countries without good reason and continue to monitor all the lawsuits around this.
