Requesting Immigration Judge Review of your Detention and Bond

MASSACHUSETTS IMMIGRANT & REFUGEE ADVOCACY COALITION

- Many immigrants who are detained by ICE may be eligible for release on bond. Don't give up your right to have your detention reviewed by an immigration judge without understanding your options!
- ICE may present you with a document called "Notice of Custody Determination" (Form I-286) informing you of ICE's decision to detain you and any bond amount set. If you want your detention to be reviewed by an immigration judge, it is important that you check off the box before "I do" to request that an Immigration Judge review your bond. If ICE asks you this question instead of giving you the form to fill out yourself, you should tell them that you want to check the box before "I do" if you would like a bond hearing. This is what that section of the form looks like:

- Some people detained in New England who do not have a final deportation order may also be entitled to additional protections as a "Guerrero Orellana class member." For example, if you are a Guerrero Orellana class member and request a bond hearing, including by checking "I do" on a Form I-286, ICE is required to give you and class counsel 72-hour notice before transferring you outside New England. Talk to a lawyer about this information.
- Every case is different. It is best to talk to an attorney about your case and your options before giving up your rights!
- Additional resources:
  - Understanding Bond (PAIR Project)
  - American Immigration Lawyers Association
  - Directory of immigration legal services in Massachusetts
  - Resources for individuals with immigration court proceedings
  - MIRA Immigration Helpline

Eng

Oct. 21, 2026